

Tower coming down

This crane reaches out of the woods on Tower Hill in Oosterville, preparing to remove the top of the old water tower located there. The tower is presently being torn down to make way for a new one to serve the area. (Village Advertiser photo by Mark Cote)

Looking very much like a flying saucer come to earth is the top of the water tower which until last week stood as a land mark on Tower Hill in Oosterville. Pictured are James Grant of the Grant Construction Company, in charge of the
